Security Becomes a Way of Life

The Problem: This recent newspaper headline suggests people are taking responsibility for their security. The reality is, normalcy is settling in since 9/11. Though people are more tolerant of longer lines, for most people, security is someone else's responsibility. Violence is still America's number one concern. Some believe that sex and violence on TV, in movies and in video games are the problem. Others believe that poverty, welfare, and single parent-fatherless homes are the cause. The fact is that drugs, alcohol, mental illness, and combinations of these all contribute to violence in America. Statistically, you are as likely to be assaulted as injured in a motor vehicle accident. Furthermore, over 20,000 people are murdered every year. Terrorism is in our own backyards. Rape, theft, assault, home invasions, and carjackings are all forms of terrorism.
